

BRAND PERCEPTION SUMMARY

KPMG

About this brand perception summary

The data contained in this summary represents the views of clients (senior end users of consulting services) as expressed to us via an online survey, more details of which you'll find in the section entitled "methodology". It does not represent the view of analysts.

The interpretation of that data, however, is ours. It's based on the unparalleled knowledge that we've acquired through years of surveying and interviewing consultants and their clients, and through the work we've done—and continue to do—advising the leaders of the world's biggest and most successful consulting firms about their businesses.

Methodology

In November and December 2016 we surveyed 2,682 clients—senior end users of consulting services from around the world, all of whom had made extensive use of consultants—and asked them to tell us about three consulting firms of their choosing, giving us 8,046 responses in total. We asked about those firms' capabilities, across a range of consulting services, about the extent to which they deliver value relative to the fees they charge, and about the attributes they associate with each firm. We also asked about which attributes are the most important, and how clients see the positioning of each firm in the market and why.

Six hundred and twenty-five of the responses we received were about KPMG. They came from a wide range of countries and industries but, because our sample size becomes quite small when we cut it to represent those countries and industries individually, we cannot go into great detail about how views change from one to the next. So, for example, while we can say how views about KPMG's overall capabilities differ between respondents in Germany and the US, we can't talk about how views differ for individual service lines between those two countries. This summary, then, is about KPMG as a global firm.

The difference between direct and indirect clients

In this report we talk about two types of clients: direct and indirect. Direct clients are clients who either have very recent experience of working with the firm they chose to tell us about or are working with it now. Indirect clients are clients who feel qualified to share an opinion about a firm but aren't among their direct clients. They may have had exposure to the work the firm has done elsewhere in their organisation or have simply formed an impression based on reading a firm's thought leadership or being exposed to its marketing in some other form—we include a breakdown of these relationships on page 26. In simple terms, indirect clients are prospects.

The differences between the opinions of these two types of clients tell us a lot about the differences between expectation (indirect clients) and reality (direct clients). But they also tell us something about the differences between a firm's marketing and what it actually delivers.

Whenever we refer to clients without specifying the relationship, we are referring to all clients—direct or indirect—that talked about KPMG.

Advertising these findings:

Firms like to use these findings in their own marketing and KPIs. Source's marketing licence allows you to publicise your ranking in advertising, editorials, presentations to external clients, below your email signature, and on your corporate website. The licence also allows you to use the Source "badge" within these. The badge is given to those firms that have been rated number one, two, or three by clients in a given sector/region for mindshare, quality and value.

Both the licence and the badge are valid for 24 months, and for more information, please contact Ella-Sian Jolley, or click here.
